Middletown, Connecticut

Forging a new image while preserving its heritage.

Middletown has much to offer everyone. The numerous historic districts with fine restored homes used today as professional offices as well as homes testify to the quality of life which has been a part of the community for decades. It is a busy crossroads community, full of vigor and stamina, with an interesting history, where much is happening.

Located at the head of the Connecticut Valley on the western banks of the Connecticut River, midway between Hartford and New Haven, it is over three hundred years old and still going strong.

Founded in 1650 and incorporated the following year, Middletown was at one time the largest city in the state, an important seaport, shipbuilding, manufacturing, agriculture and mercantile center. Evolving from rural Puritan origins, the town has experienced periods of rapid industrial rise and decline to a current cycle of renewal and development. During the past decade or so, Middletown has become a hub of activity for a large area population of over 100,000 in the city and neighboring towns.

The city covers nearly 43 square miles, lies within close proximity to Long Island Sound and its beaches, and is within easy reach of Boston and New York City.

Wesleyan University, since its founding in 1831, has contributed to the character and economy of the community. The 152-year-old Wesleyan University and relatively young but highly regarded Middlesex Community College provide opportunities for education for nearly 5,000 students. Today, on a campus of over 100 acres, the school has become a nationally recognized institution of higher learning with a large student body and prominent faculty. The associated Center for the Arts at Wesleyan, the Davison Art Center with its museum featuring exhibits of outstanding collections, and the continuing involvement of students in the community make these two institutions an integral part of Middletown.

Long the business and governmental center of Middlesex County, the city has developed from a thriving seaport during the 1880's to its current status as a commercial and business center. As with many towns which grew around shipbuilding and shipping trade, with the advent of other methods of transportation Middletown lost its place as a front-runner of commerce. Now through the development of outlying sections of town to accommodate business and industrial giants, the city is beginning to attract firms because of its quality of life and all that it has to offer.

Main Street is reputed to be the widest one in the entire State of Connecticut. It has recently been the scene of considerable restoration of the old buildings and homes, some of which were actually moved to their present locations. Annually at the end of July a portion of Main Street is closed off to allow local merchants to participate in the largest sidewalk sale in the state. Offering everything from entertainment, food, and most important of all, bargains, it draws thousands each year.

Recreation and spectator sports are much a part of community life, with the Connecticut River easily reached through the recently created Harbor Park. This is the termination of the annual Head of the Connecticut Regatta held each October, drawing crews from all over the eastern portion of the United States and spectators by the thousands. Palmer Field provides an excellent location for the many area ball teams and for regional tournaments, with convenient access from most major highways. Summer concerts at various locations provide a relaxing way to end a day.

In sum, Middletown can best be characterized as a moderately growing residential, commercial and university community with substantial industrial and human resources. Easy accessibility by a network of highways, a reasonable climate, sprawling boundaries, heterogeneous make-up, excellent housing, and educational facilities are among the appealing factors continuously attracting new residents and businesses alike.

Now with significant federal and state assistance, major changes and improvements are taking place in the downtown and the environs of the city; helping forge a new image while preserving the charm of its earlier heritage.

BRIEF HISTORICAL BACKGROUND -

Middletown was founded by Europeans, when a Dutch sailing vessel anchored near the shore after making its way up the river from the Long Island Sound. In 1614, Adrian Block, Dutch navigator, debarked at a point near the present Middletown waterfront; however, Dutch colonization attempts were shortlived, giving way to English-speaking settlers who had fled from the Massachusetts Bay Colony seeking greater religious freedom and autonomy.

Originally the area had been called Mattabesek after a local Indian tribe, but in 1651 it acquired its present name as a means of identifying its geographical location between the Sound and the upper river settlement of Windsor.

The first settlers purchased their land from the Indians, including much of the waterfront, and devoted themselves largely to matters of farming and worship. Eventually they merged in federation with other colonies in the state, producing the first written constitution, a forerunner to the United States Constitution.

Development picked up in the latter 17th Century and Middletown became a thriving seaport because of its wide and deep channel; and ultimately a shipbuilding center. The steamboat era in the 19th Century, when passenger and commercial operations depended heavily on the river, gradually yielded to the railroad which, in turn, spun its strands of iron up and down the river banks and east and west, accelerating the growth of agriculture, manufacturing and other industries.

Immigration in the late 19th and early 20th Centuries supplied the muscle for industrial expansion, helped along by spurts of activity during both world wars. Rapid urbanization as Americans took the road and the lingering blight of the Depression caused a general demise here as in many of the older New England towns. Subsequently, urban planners, encouraged by Federal assistance programs, including the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development started evaluating the need for development to prevent stagnation and to assure continuing growth. The fruits of these efforts are part of Middletown's dramatic comeback.

Portland, Connecticut

Picturesque & Progressive

Portland, formerly East Middletown, was settled about 1690. It was made a parish in 1714, and a separate town in 1841. The name was taken from Portland in the English county of Dorset, where there is extensive quarrying.

Portland is located in Middlesex County in central Connecticut, about 12 miles south of Hartford. It is bordered on the north by the Town of Glastonbury, on the east by the Town of East Hampton, on the south by the Connecticut River and on the west by the Connecticut River, the City of Middletown and the Town of Cromwell.

In the early days of the town's history, the two principal industries were the quarrying of brownstone, around which Portland was built, and shipbuilding. The first vessel to be built at the Gildersleeve Shipyard in 1741, was a schooner of 90 tons. During the Revolution, a number of warships were launched from here, and others during the War of 1812. At a very early date there were two grist mills that supplied flour to the Continental soldiers stationed at New London. Other industries were 15 cider mills, two cider brandy distilleries, a comb factory, a casting foundry, two sawmills, a wagon factory and a brick yard. As early as 1669 permission was granted to build boats on the bank of the Connecticut River, and as time went on, wharves and building yards appeared along the shore. Most of the boats made were for coastal trade and West Indies trade.

Today storage and distribution of oil and gasoline have become a major enterprise. National and local companies have taken advantage of the deep water dockage facilities on the river, which, combined with the central location of the town, make this an advantageous storage and distribution center.

In Strickland Quarry, the "mineralogist's paradise," about 25 varieties of minerals have been found, the largest assortment of any Connecticut mine. The commercial products have been feldspar for pottery and white mica for electrical insulation.

There are 20 manufacturing concerns today in Portland producing fertilizers, insecticides, rubber products, coolants, corrugated boxes, various metal and machined products, packaging machinery, and printed materials.

New industries are encouraged to locate in Portland. The local Industrial Development Commission is active in promoting industrial developments and is in a position to bring interested parties together for the purpose of arranging favorable sale and lease agreements. Labor management relations in Portland are harmonious. Virtually all workers receive the same benefits as workers in other areas, including vacation time, paid holidays, hospitalization, pension plans and cost of living allowances.

Middlesex County

Middlesex County is right in the middle . . . Right in the middle of the state. Right in the middle of the shoreline.

The Connecticut River, which bisects Connecticut, wanders through unspoiled forests and fields, past picturesque, historic villages before making its grand entrance into Long Island Sound at Old Saybrook. Its final grand fling is most beautiful of all: Middlesex County. The area is rich in history, natural beauty, sights, sounds and activities that are never out of season.

Each town and every twist of the river has its own story, each offers something for everyone. Just below

Hartford is the town of Cromwell, home of the star-studded Canon-Sammy Davis Jr. Open, the G.H.O. golf tournament. With the unspoiled atmosphere of the small community but the attractions of a spectator golf course designed by renowned Peter Dye, the event is an annual crowd-pleaser.

Leaving Cromwell, travel south and watch for the friendly sign on the Portland side of the river which reads "Come on Over." It was in Portland in years past that the stone used to build many great brownstone buildings in New York and other cities was quarried. Historic reminders can be found of Indian burial grounds and cobalt mines; shipbuilding industries that are evident in all of the river towns can also be seen.

A few hundred yards further down the river, you might see rowing crews from Middletown's high schools and Wesleyan University practicing. This stretch of the river is the destination of the Head of the Connecticut Regatta, the October event which draws thousands of spectators every year to watch crews from many areas. Middletown stretches to the west and is home of Wesleyan University as well as many industries and businesses, from family-owned shops to super-giants of the insurance business.

In the next town, Durham, farming history becomes evident, little changed since the 19th Century. The annual Durham Fair, one of the most popular around and also the largest in the state draws people from all over New England, nearby New York as well as Connecticut.

The farming community crosses town lines and continues into Middlefield, where the Lyman family's farm has been in continuous operation since 1741. The Orchards now contain over 25,000 trees bearing many varieties of fruit. Their store is a larger version of the many family-run produce outlets which travelers can stop at to supplement the fine eating of area restaurants. Middlefield is also home of great skiing, with resort-type facilities to take care of the novice to advance sportsman.

East of Middletown, across the Arrigoni Bridge, passing through Portland you come to East Hampton. Lake Pocotopaug, one of Connecticut's largest natural lakes, makes the town a favorite for beach activities and for cold weather sports of ice fishing and ice skating for the hearty outdoorsman. Comstock Covered Bridge, one of only three left in the state, is also in East Hampton, which is even today known as Belltown because many bells made in America during the 19th Century were manufactured here.
